The station would serve as another new transit hub between Miami and central Florida, near downtown and south of Interstate 85.. The FCC is now studying the proposal to see if it'll actually protect creators; if they do, it could prevent millions of creative efforts from getting off the ground — or at least, not as much as the FCC would like. For example, a 2011 Federal Trade Commission ruling stated that it is "obvious" that the FCC would find the creation of third-party websites beneficial by removing barriers that would prevent other creators from monetizing their video creations. In the same court, the Federal Communications Commission stated that YouTube and others do nothing illegal by charging companies for their content and that doing so would not compromise users rights.
